

Markets benefited from potential easing in trade tensions

- The mood in financial markets continued to improve amid the release of the Huawei CFO, coupled with comments from US President Trump announcing his intention to intervene in the case if necessary in order to avoid a rise in tensions in US-China relations (see). Also, China's willingness to open its markets to foreign companies further improved the mood in the markets (see). However, in Europe, the latest news announcing a vote of confidence on Mrs May, with results due late this evening, warrant the uncertainty (see), while tomorrow's focus will be on the ECB meeting.
- Against this backdrop, equity markets rose across the board as China-US trade tensions seemed to recede. Asian equity indices closed high, while in China the RMB appreciated against the USD, favoured by the optimistic mood on trade issues.
- Both the US Treasury 10Y yield and the German 10Y Bund yield inched up. Today's release of inflation figures for the US, which were in line with expectations, had a mild impact on US yields, but reinforced expectations of a hike in interest rates at next week's FOMC meeting (see). Peripheral risk premia narrowed, driven by Italy, after comments suggesting a potential cut in its budget deficit in order to compromise with the European Union rules (see).
- The USD depreciated across the board, while the EUR recovered some ground ahead of tomorrow's ECB policy meeting. The GBP appreciated strongly, despite the surrounding fears about Brexit developments. EM currencies were able to take advantage of the weakness of the USD. The BRL outperformed other Latam currencies ahead of today's Central Bank meeting, in which it is expected to keep its interest rate on hold. The increase in crude oil prices also supported Latam currencies.
