

Risk-off mood prevails in financial markets

- Safe-haven bond yields continued to trend lower, dragged by the ongoing US-China trade strains, alongside the release of a gloomy business survey and increasing anxiety over a no-deal Brexit.
- Since US-China trade friction escalated, optimism about a potential trade deal has waned, especially after no further trade talks between China and the US have been scheduled since the last round ended on May 10th, when US hiked tariffs on $200 bn Chinese goods. Moreover, the US Treasury Secretary Mnuchin noted that he is not planning to visit China again, saying Trump and Xi Jinping may meet at the end of June at the G20 summit.
- The risk is that the polarization of Brexit debate could lead to corner results. In UK MP May "new and improved" Brexit was reviled by Eurosceptic Tories as a sellout to Labour, while it seems to be too minimal to win over the opposition Remainers. May now faces growing pressures to pull bill voting and resign within days
- Manufacturing data disappointed in Europe and in the US (see). The Eurozone Manufacturing PMI declined in May against consensus expectations of an increase as did European Services PMI (see). German business confidence also came in weaker than expected, casting a shadow over recent recovery in economic indicators. The ECB minutes confirmed the recent dovish tone, as the ECB considers that inflation remains too low, amid falling inflation expectations. The ECB also acknowledged the extension of the slower growth momentum but the recent improvement shows more solid growth, in line with the baseline scenario. On TLTRO-III, members suggested that its pricing should warrant its use as a backstop, providing insurance in times of elevated uncertainty.
- The Fed minutes confirmed that members do not want to act in hastily, suggesting they support patience on rate moves for 'some time'. Moreover, it also seem to backing Powell's view that low inflation is 'transitory'.
- Sovereign bond yields extended declines on the back of increasing risk-off mood in financial markets, with falls in both the US and UK yields outpacing the decline across their peers, while it risk premia inched up slightly in peripherals, while HY spreads also widened slightly. Market implied probability for a rate cut in increased to 80%, while the probability of an additional cut in 2020 rose to 69%, due to the sharp fall in equity markets.
- In FX markets investors sought shelter in both the JPY and the CHF, whereas the GBP and cyclical currencies underperformed. EM currencies have remained under pressure, with the CNY continuing to sliding back although the PBoC set a stronger-than-expected fixing.
- Equity markets declined sharply across the board, led by the cyclical sectors, while implied market volatility bounced back. The falls across commodity prices, especially oil and industry metal commodities, underscored market concerns about the impact of the ongoing trade friction on global growth. Oil prices have slumped today
