

Market Comment

Gloomy Eurozone outlook weighed on European equities.

- The Eurozone economic sentiment decreased in line with expectations in July to its lowest level in more than three years (102.7, consensus 102.6, previous month 103.3). This fall was driven mainly by a deterioration of the industrial confidence resulted from more pessimistic production expectations and views on the current level of overall order books. Moreover, France 2Q19 GDP declined unexpectedly (0.2% q/q, consensus 0.3% q/q, previous month 0.3% q/q) dragged by a weaker consumer spending and inventories. Elsewhere, the GfK consumer confidence in Germany fell slightly (9.7, consensus 9.7, previous month 9.8).
- US economic data were supportive. The U.S. consumer confidence in July increased more than expected (135.7, consensus 125.0, previous month 121.5) suggesting that consumers are more optimistic in the current situation and also about the short-term outlook. Meanwhile, personal income and spending moderated in June in line with expectations.
- US-China trade frictions remain alive, ahead of today's high representative meeting. The U.S. president Trump said that China hasn't met its pledges to buy U.S. agricultural goods, lowering the hopes of any breakthrough with trade talks which started today in Shanghai.
- Fears mount over no-deal Brexit on October 31 as Boris Johnson insisted on leaving the EU with or without a deal. Britain's new prime minister, Boris Johnson, said that he would not meet EU leaders unless the previously rejected Withdrawal Agreement is reopened. On the other hand, EU officials insisted that it has no intention to reopen it.
- Sovereign bond yields were steady ahead of tomorrow's FOMC meeting. Italy's risk premium widened moderately as demand at its debt auction eased.
- In FX markets, the USD remains strong but depreciating against the JPY after the Bank of Japan held status quo on rates at its July's policy meeting, awaiting for tomorrow's Fed meeting. Moreover, the GBP depreciated further to a two-year low on increasing concerns of a no-deal Brexit. In emerging markets, the TRY extended its gains supported by the virtual certainty of a Fed rate cut at tomorrow's FOMC meeting and by lower possibilities of U.S. sanctions over the Turkey's purchase of a Russian defense system.
- European equity markets declined sharply with cyclical sectors leading the fall due to the gloomy economic outlook driven by weaker France 2Q19 GDP and Eurozone economic sentiment. Moreover, disappointing earning results along with Brexit concerns weighed on European equity indices. U.S. equity indices also inched down as hopes for a trade deal wane, after Trump's comments.
