

Market Comment

Markets regain some ground as Yuan stabilizes

- The PBoC calmed markets today with a daily currency fixing stronger than analysts expected (6.9683 per dollar vs. consensus 6.9871 per dollar) and below yesterday's closing price, bringing some relief to markets. This action could avoid further backlash from the US, which labelled China as a currency manipulator, after the Chinese RMB breached the psychological level of 7.0 against the USD. The U.S. Nonetheless risk-off mood persist due to trade tensions, with Secretary Mnuchin setting to engage with the International Monetary Fund to take action on this matter.
- Some positive news on the data front: factory orders in Germany rose more than expected in June (2.5% m/m, consensus 0.5% m/m, upwardly revised data from previous month -2.0% m/m). Elsewhere, U.S. job openings fell from 7384 in May (upwardly revised) to 7348 in June, although less than expected.
- The 10Y UST yield recovered partially from yesterday's sharp fall. In Europe, the 10Y German Bund yields extended its decline, hitting new lows, while Italy's risk premium narrowed, where the coalition government won a confidence vote in parliament, ruling out the possibility of new elections ahead of Fitch's credit-rating reviews this Friday.
- Across the G10 board, the DXY recovered some ground with the USD appreciating against safe-haven currencies (USDJPY +0.4%, USDCHF +0.26%). Meanwhile, the GBP gained against both the USD and the EUR as both the European Commission and the UK are willing to discuss Brexit in the coming weeks to avoid a disorderly exit. Moreover, opponents of a no-deal Brexit hardened their stances to stop Boris Johnson from trying to leave the EU without an agreement.
- In EM, Latam currencies were mixed while the Chinese RMB, both onshore and offshore, also strengthened against the USD following the stronger yuan fixing. CNY+12M futures still suggest that investors are expecting a further depreciation against the US dollar.
- Gold prices continued to climb, reaching its highest level since 2013 driven by a lower prospects of a trade deal.
- Equities were mixed with American stocks recovering from yesterday's decline. Moreover, the VIX trimmed yesterday's significant increase after PBoC officials reassured foreign exporters that the currency won't continue to weaken significantly.
