

Market Comment

All eyes on the European Central Bank. ECB Preview

- Sovereign bond yields rose as investors lowered their expectations that the ECB will unleash a big stimulus package this Thursday at its policy meeting. The market is not pricing in an immediate QE, but a 10 bps depo rate cut by the ECB is a virtual certainty. Market expectations of a 20 bps depo rate cut continue to decline, hovering around 32%.
- Last Friday, Powell repeated the Fed will continue to act as appropriate to sustain the expansion, which did not impact the markets. The market expects a 25 bps Fed rate cut this month, but expectations of a larger cut (50 bps) waned.
- China's trade balance dropped in August as its exports unexpectedly contracted, dragged down by the trade war (-1.0% YoY, 2.2% YoY expected, 3.3% YoY prior). Nonetheless, European economic data were positive with Germany's trade balance increasing more than expected in July. Germany's exports unexpectedly rose (0.7% MoM, -0.5% MoM expected, -0.1% MoM prior), while its imports fell more than expected (-1.5% MoM, -0.3% MoM expected, 0.7% MoM prior). Elsewhere, the UK economy grew surprisingly fast in July (0.3% MoM, 0.1% MoM expected, 0.0% MoM prior) with a stronger-than-expected factory activity in July.
- Sovereign bond yields surged across the yield curve, especially in longer tenors. Both 10Y yields on U.S. Treasury and German bund increased 5 bps. 10Y UK gilt yield climbed 9 bps after UK PM Boris Johnson emphasized he wanted to achieve a Brexit deal before next month's deadline, despite the fact that its Parliament will begin its suspension later today. In the European peripheral, Italy's risk premium pared its downward trend, leading the Eurozone bond losses.
- Safe-haven currencies weakened with the DXY index and the JPY falling by 0.2%, while G10 commodity linked currencies gained. The pound appreciated (+0.7%) driven by the positive economic activity data in the U.K. and hopes of a Brexit deal. The euro also gained (+0.3%) on hopes of German fiscal stimulus to revive growth and stronger-than-expected exports. In EM, LatAm currencies depreciated across the board (LACI -0.2%), although the MXN remained unchanged as its August's inflation was in line with the consensus. Moreover, the TRY slipped (-0.8%) after the President Erdogan said Turkey will lower interest rates.
- In commodities, the price of Brent crude went up to $63 per barrel (+2.0%) after Saudi Arabia's new energy minister signaled that OPEC will continue with production cuts.
- U.S. and European stocks were steady as investors remained cautious ahead of the ECB meeting later this week, except for Britain's FTSE 100 index (-0.6%) as the sterling continued appreciating.
