Sovereign bonds on demand amid disappointing economic data

- Due to technical issues yesterday's report could not be published. Please find today's report with the main financial markets drivers since the weekend.
- Positive news flows on trade talks: China provided some additional waivers to several domestic state and private companies to buy U.S. soybeans. Meanwhile, the U.S. Treasury Secretary downplayed the cancellation of China's delegation visit to U.S. farms, although it said that China's Vice-Premier Liu He would be heading to Washington the second week of October.
- Manufacturing growth contracted further in the Eurozone: PMI data were disappointing in September (45.6, consensus 47.3, previous month 47), especially in Germany (41.4, consensus 44, previous 43.5). Ifo business expectations also fell further in Germany to the lowest in a decade this month (90.8, consensus 92, previous 91.3), despite the fact that the business climate improved. On the other hand, the U.S. manufacturing sector recovered: PMI improved in September (51, consensus 50.4, previous 50.3) although services PMI moderated (50.9, consensus 51.4, previous 51.4). Meanwhile, U.S. consumer confidence worsened more than expected in September (125.1, consensus 133, previous 134.2).
- Central banks will keep supporting growth: ECB's Draghi said the monetary authority is ready to cut interest rates again amid a lack of clear signs of economic recovery. Nonetheless, he encouraged governments to step up fiscal policies in those countries with room to do so. In the U.S., officials backed the adoption of a Fed Repo facility that should cap market strains due to liquidity mismatch, whereas Bullard said the Fed may need to ease monetary policy further to offset downside risks. Nonetheless, the PBoC downplayed any expectations of China embarking on an aggressive easing cycle, suggesting that the current monetary policy is appropriate. In this context, regarding market implied expectations of further monetary policy actions, the Fed fund futures priced in a 75% probability of a 25bps cut by the year end, while the OIS curve has postponed the ECB additional deposit cut for next year.
- The 10Y German yield consolidated yesterday's declines after weak PMI, while the UST bond dropped 6 bps today, dragged down by the U.S. consumer confidence. Elsewhere, 10Y peripheral bond yields dropped sharply yesterday with their risk premia narrowing slightly. The Spanish risk premium extended its narrowing today as the S&P rose Spain's rating one notch to A with a Stable Outlook as the rating agency considers that Spain's economic growth remains above the EMU average, its fiscal adjustment process remains on track and there is ongoing improvement in the external sector. Currently, Spain's rating is at Baa1 by Moody's and A- by Fitch. Moreover, the yield on the 10Y Italian bond was steady, after declining 9 bps on Monday as the government settled a deficit target of around 2-2.1% of output and a 2020 GDP growth between -0.4% and -0.5%.
- In FX, the GBP erased yesterday's depreciation after the U.K. Supreme Court declared unanimously that the suspension of Parliament was unlawful. However, Boris Johnson pledged to leave the UK with or without a deal next month. The USD depreciated slightly against its G10 peers (DXY index -0.1%), trimming yesterday's gains. Meanwhile, EM currencies were mixed with the TRY and MXN appreciating against the USD (+0.3% and +0.1% respectively).
- The Euro Stoxx 50 remained steady after dropping 0.8% yesterday, dragged down by the deterioration of the European manufacturing activity. Moreover, the energy sector underperformed in both Europe and the U.S. as the price of crude oil fell 1.7% as Saudi Arabia is restoring its lost oil output.
