

Market Comment

Volatile sentiment

- The mood of the financial markets between risk-off and risk-on this week, as growing optimism over the possibility of a US-China trade deal was offset by persistent concerns over global growth slowdown, funding strains in the US money market and rising US political uncertainty.
- Preference for sovereign bonds continued. Developed markets' yields dropped across the board: the 10Y bond yield declined -6.5bps in GER (to -0.59%), -2bp in US (to 1.7%), while peripheral yields declined around 9bps on average (with limited positive differentiation between Spain and the rest, although S&P raised Spain's rating by one notch to A- Stable). Market-based inflation expectations retreated (5y5y forward inflation swap declined by 6bps to 1.2% in GER and by 4bps in the US).
- Market expectations for further easing remain high (70% probability of 25bps Fed interest rate cut in Dec, 70% probability of 10bps ECB depo rate cut in 1Q20).
- In FX markets, the US dollar strengthened further against most currencies, especially vs. the euro (-0.8%) and the pound sterling (-1.3%) as fears of a no-deal Brexit resurfaced. Most EM currencies depreciated, especially those exposed to oil prices, which declined 3% as the Saudis restore the oil output after the supply disruption. The TRY was one of the few currencies which appreciated (USDTRY +1.3%) favoured by the decline in oil prices and the remarks on limited monetary policy room by CBRT.
- Equity indices inched down, led by cyclical sectors, including the banking sector. The implied volatility remained steady (VIX 16).
