

Market Comment

Market volatility increases amid renewed growth concerns.

- Market risk sentiment worsened as macroeconomic data continue to support a gloomy global outlook.
- Today there were few economic data. The only relevant data was the US private employment data, which grew less than expected in September (135k, consensus 140k, prior 157k) with the prior month's gain downwardly revised, increasing concerns about the global economic cycle, especially after yesterday's weak manufacturing figures in the US. All eyes will be on Friday's non-farm payrolls, as a tone of caution prevails in financial markets.
- Equity indices declined sharply across the board, led by cyclical sectors, while industry commodities and oil prices also dropped, underpinned by fears of an economic slowdown. Political risk in the US also added some noise to the markets. As a result, the S&P implied volatility (the VIX index) rose above 20. Moreover, European equity indices were also dragged down further due to higher yields, amid weak growth and the threat of the U.S. imposing tariffs on EU exports over Airbus after the WTO ruling (see).
- Sovereign bond yields were mixed. Yields declined in the US after the weak US data, especially in shorter tenors. However, 10Y Eurozone sovereign bond yields increased with ECB officials stressing the need for fiscal expansion. 10Y Italian bonds underperformed its European peers with its risk premium widening by 2 bps.
- The JPY extended its gains on its safe haven appeal (+0.5%), while the dollar remained between two opposite forces: the increase in risk aversion and weaker US economic activity. However, the CHF depreciated (-0.4%) as the nation's inflation fell unexpectedly in September. The sterling fluctuated with no clear direction as Brexit uncertainty remains high. The GBPUSD 3M implied volatility soared 1.8% after Boris Johnson outlined his plan for a new Brexit agreement and said that Britain is ready to exit the EU without an agreement by the end of the month. Elsewhere, EM currencies experienced a subdued recovery except for the KRW (-0.6%) and ARS (-0.5%).
