Markets wait for more clues on trade negotiations

- Three-day risk-on rally halted as investors await new developments on the U.S.-China trade negotiations in absence of relevant economic data.
- The IMF cut its earlier estimates for this year's Eurozone growth from 1.3% to 1.2% as the deterioration of the manufacturing sector could spill over into the services sector, while revising down the growth in 2020 and 2021 by 0.1% to 1.4%. Separately, Germany's Council of Economic Experts' downgraded Germany's growth forecast for this year from 0.8% to 0.5% and for next year from 1.7% to 0.9%.
- On the trade front, China is pressing the U.S. to eliminate more tariffs, but it is still unclear to what extent the U.S. is willing to compromise.
- Today's key economic indicator was Germany's factory orders, which rose more than expected in September (1.3% m/m, consensus 0.1% m/m, previous -0.4% m/m), but orders were still down by 5.4% y/y. Both domestic and foreign contracts increased by 1.6% and 1.1% respectively. Moreover, October's Eurozone Markit composite PMI was slightly revised up (50.6, consensus 50.2, previous 50.2), remaining near stagnation.
- The yield on the 10Y UST bond declined 3bps, trimming partially yesterday's jump. European sovereign bond yields also inched down (10Y Ger -2bps), except for Italy whose risk premium widened by 1.4bps. The 10Y UK gilt yield led the losses in Europe (-6bps) with the political campaign period starting officially. Regarding monetary policy, the Fed's Williams said the Fed will be data dependent, while the Fed's Evans said it would have to respond to a significant negative shock. In this context, market expectations of an additional Fed rate cut by June rose marginally to 53%.
- G10 currencies showed minor changes. The DXY index inched down (-0.1%), alongside the sterling ahead of tomorrow's BoE policy decision. The Japanese yen appreciated slightly (USDJPY +0.2%), while the euro remained unchanged, trimming early modest gains. Elsewhere, EM currencies depreciated in general (FXJPEMCS index -0.3%) with the Brazilian real falling sharply (USDBRL -2%) led by the absence of foreign firms in the auction of oil deposits, thwarting expectations of strong dollar inflows. The LatAm currencies index was also dragged down by the Colombian peso (USDCOP -0.6%). Moreover, the offshore yuan breached the 7 USD threshold.
- In commodities, oil prices fell (Brent -1.1%) after the U.S. crude oil inventories increased more than expected last week, also supported by the OPEC willingness to maintain their current output targets rather than cutting them.
- Stock markets were mixed with the S&P 500 consolidating levels near record highs, whereas the Euro Stoxx 50 edged higher (+0.2%), led by consumer staples.
