

Market Comment

Cautiousness amid concerns over U.S. consumption

- Investors were cautious, awaiting further progress in U.S.-China trade negotiations. A weaker U.S. retail sales outlook spurred concerns about the resilience of the U.S. consumption and its economic outlook.
- On the trade front, the U.S. issued a new 90-day extension yesterday allowing U.S. companies to continue doing business with Huawei. Investors remain sensitive to trade developments as doubts about the potential trade deal persist. Separately, the U.S. Senate is preparing a pro-democracy vote to support Hong Kong protesters, which may increase geopolitical tensions.
- Today's light economic agenda was focused on U.S. housing starts, which increased less than expected in October (1314k, cons. 1320k, previous 1266k), although previous figures were revised upward by 10k. The growth was underpinned by the recent pickup in new housing demand.
- Sovereign bonds were mixed. The yield on the 10Y Treasury fell by 3bps amid disappointing retail sales and weaker-than-expected housing data in the U.S. In Europe, the 10Y German bond yield remained steady, whereas peripheral risk premia widened, underpinned by profit-taking into year-end (Italy +3.6bps to 158).
- With regard to monetary policy, the Fed's Williams comments at the annual SIFMA meeting had a muted impact on markets as he confirmed the Fed's stance from the previous FOMC. Market expectations of an additional Fed rate cut inched up marginally after yesterday's meeting between the U.S. President and the Fed Chair, with the former stating that the Fed's rates should be lower. Expectations of at least one additional Fed rate cut by June 2020 hover around 53%, while markets priced in a 73% of probability for December 2020.
- G10 currencies moved in a narrow range amid a light economic agenda with commodity-linked currencies leading the gains. The Japanese yen appreciated slightly as the U.S. economic outlook glooms. Sterling slipped ahead of today's first election debate. Elsewhere, LatAm currencies continued to be under pressure as local social unrest lingers. The Chilean peso dropped sharply (USDCLP -1.8%) led by analysts' expectations of a contraction in Chile's economy in this quarter.
- In commodities, oil prices extended yesterday's sharp drop (Brent -1.7%) on the back of concerns over global oversupply as expectations of a further output reduction by the next month ease.
- U.S. and European stocks reversed early gains due to the weakness of the U.S. retail sector.
