

Market Comment

Caution prevailed as US-China trade talks stumble

- This week financial markets continued to scale back expectations of a US-China phase-one trade deal. This, together with softer economic data, particularly from the US and the EZ, extended investor appetite for safe-haven bonds: core sovereign yields declined further this week (10Y yield -6bps in the US and -2bps in Germany) with the US yield curve flattening. Search for yield benefited Italy, which risk premium tightened by -2.5bps to 154pbs), although the Spanish risk premium was broadly stable.
- As a result, markets increased expectations of a Fed rate cut next year (77% probability of one interest rate cut by the end of 2020). It is also possible that the meeting between Trump and Powell also contributed to the increase in rate cut expectations. However, the odds of an ECB rate cut remain below 40%. ECB's Lagarde called for a strong policy mix (supportive monetary policy and higher public investment) and a review of the central bank's strategy. Minutes of the Oct meeting showed a strong agreement to maintain a highly accommodative monetary policy for an extended period of time due to downward risks.
- November's Markit PMIs were positive in the U.S., but weak in the euro area. Both manufacturing and services PMIs rose more than expected in the US, underpinned by an improvement in measures of output, new orders and employment. Nonetheless, the Eurozone's Flash composite PMI fell slightly in November (50.3 from 50.6; Cons: 50.9) driven by worsening service confidence (-0.7 to 51.5; Cons: 52.4), despite further stabilization in the manufacturing sector (+0.7 to 46.6; Cons: 46.4). This, along with steady figures in France and the slight improvement in Germany points to a deterioration in the rest of the member states and increases concerns about contagion from weak manufacturing to domestic demand.
- Minor changes in G-10 currencies. Most EM currencies slightly depreciated against the USD on the back of lower prospects of a trade deal, led by the Chilean peso due to the ongoing political strains (CLP -2.5%, MXN -1.1%, CNY -0.4%). However, the Turkish lira recovered some ground this week.
- Despite the overall cautious tone, equity markets declined moderately, while equity volatility edged up slightly (VIX 13).
