

Market Comment

The trade rollercoaster goes on

- Market risk sentiment recovered on positive trade headlines. China said it will increase penalties for intellectual property violations, increasing hopes of a trade deal. Moreover, the Chinese media said both countries are very close to a phase-one trade deal.
- German business confidence improved in November, in line with consensus (95; cons: 95; previous: 94.7). Nonetheless, the improvement lacked conviction as the assessment of the future business outlook rose less than expected (92.1; cons: 92.5; previous 91.6). On the other hand, the assessment of the current situation in both the manufacturing and construction sectors declined in November. A bounce in trade and services sentiment was partially offset by manufacturing sluggishness, suggesting meaningful growth acceleration in 4Q19 remains unlikely. Moreover, there were some mixed activity data in the US: the Chicago Fed activity index fell unexpectedly in October (-0.71; cons: -0.2; previous: -0.45), while the Dallas Fed manufacturing activity rose more than expected in November, but remained at contraction levels (-1.3; cons: -3.8; previous: -5.1).
- The yield on the 10Y US Treasury bond inched down marginally ahead of Powell's speech today, while the 10-2Y flattened slightly as the Chicago Fed national index suggested that US economic activity slowed further in October. In Europe, the 10Y German bund oscillated in a narrow range, whereas peripheral risk premium narrowed as investors search for yield, especially in Italy and Portugal.
- Sterling outperformed its G10 peers as the Conservative Party continues to lead the latest opinion polls. The USD remained unchanged, trimming early gains, while the rest of G10 currencies depreciated slightly. The euro slipped as the improvement in business confidence in Germany lacked conviction. Elsewhere, EM currencies depreciated in general. However, the Chilean peso changed its role and led the gains in emerging markets, despite tomorrow's general strike.
- Global stock markets edged higher amid a fresh dose of positive trade developments, especially the Hang Seng index after pro-democracy candidates in Hong Kong won a landslide victory in local elections.
