Markets takeoff on Trump's "big deal" tweet

- Trade developments swung to optimistic after the US President said a trade deal with China is close. In this context, according to The WSJ, the US offered to roll back existing tariff rates by up to 50% on $360bn of Chinese goods and to cancel the tariffs set to take effect on Sunday. In exchange, China needs to commit to purchasing larger amounts of U.S. farm goods, better protect IP rights, and allow greater access to China's financial-services sector.
- Both the Fed and the ECB left their benchmark interest rates unchanged, as was widely expected, but both signaled that monetary policy will remain accommodative. The Fed signaled an indefinite pause as it would alter the level of accommodation only if there were some "material" changes in its outlook, including global developments and muted inflation pressures. Regarding Fed's member outlook for interest rates, the DOTs suggest a steady interest rate in 2020, and a slight increase in following years. The number of members expecting an increase in 2020 dropped from nine in September to four (see). At her first meeting, Ms. Lagarde left unchanged the ECB's monetary policy stance, suggesting a continuist of the dovish message. Although she recognized some improvement in growth and inflation outlook, especially when she sees that risks have become less pronounced. Elsewhere, Ms. Lagarde announced for 2020 (to start in January) a comprehensive review of ECB's strategy. The definition of the target will be reviewed, and the different tools for monetary policy, or even a digital currency. When asked if this implies helicopter money or equity purchases, she did not close the door to them.
- Eurozone industrial production continued to shrink in October by 0.5% m/m (Cons: 0.5% m/m; Previous: -0.1% m/m), while previous figures were revised down from 0.1% m/m. By country, German and Italian industrial production continued to fall, while French industrial production grew more than estimated. In the US, producer prices were unchanged in November (Cons: 0.2% m/m), while the measure that excludes energy and food fell unexpectedly by 0.2% m/m (Cons: 0.2% m/m), signaling inflation remains subdued.
- Sovereign bond yields jumped sharply driven by investors' risk appetite on trade deal hopes, with the US and German 10-2Y yield curves steepening. In Europe, the 10Y German bond underperformed its peers with the ECB monetary policy decision having a mute impact on it, whereas peripheral risk premia narrowed.
- Stock markets rallied with cyclical sectors leading the gains. The banking sector surged significantly amid prospects of a trade deal, although European banks were also supported by ECB's Lagarde statements, especially when she seems open to quantitative measures. The S&P 500 continued to hit fresh record highs, while the VIX index inched down to 15.
- The Japanese yen underperformed its G10 peers as market risk sentiment improved with positive trade developments. This time optimism about a trade deal boost the USD, as trade deal should improve growth outlook, while the euro fluctuated in a narrow range amid ECB's Lagarde statements. Meanwhile, the pound depreciated on the British election uncertainty as the latest polls showed a tighter race between the Conservative and Labour parties. Elsewhere, EM currencies also gained on trade hops, with the TRY appreciating, despite the Central Bank of Turkey deciding to cut its one-week repo rate more than expected by 2 percentage points to 12%.
