Financial markets found some ground

Financial markets found some ground as investors wait for further developments on US-Iran geopolitical conflict. Iran has warned to retaliate against the US but it is currently studying different retaliation scenarios. On the trade front, US-China trade negotiations turned optimistic after China's Vice Premier Liu confirmed he will be in Washington next week to sign the phase-one trade deal on January 15th. Economic data also contributed to stabilizing financial markets as manufacturing confidence was slightly revised upward.

Inflation inched up in the Eurozone, while the ISM non-manufacturing suggests the US services sector remained strong in December. Today's economic releases were positive. In the Eurozone, December's inflation estimation rose in line with expectations (1.3% YoY, Consensus 1.3%YoY, Previous 1.0% YoY), while core inflation was unchanged (1.3% YoY; Consensus 1.3%YoY; Previous 1.3%YoY). The acceleration of the eurozone inflation was mainly boosted by higher energy and oil prices. Elsewhere, the Non-Manufacturing Index grew modestly in December (55.0; Consensus: 54.5; Previous: 53.9). The US trade deficit decreased surprisingly in November after being revised downward (-$43.1b; Consensus: -$43.6b Previous: -$46.9b) driven by an increase in exports while imports contracted. Factory orders fell by less than expected to -0.7% in November from 0.3% (revised upward 0.1%).

Sovereign yields leveled off after last week's sharp fall due to the increase in US-Iran geopolitical tensions. Positive prospects about US-China has contributed to stabilize government yields. Meanwhile, financial markets expect the Fed to remain supportive if US-Iran tensions eventually surge. Against this background, implied probability of an additional 25bps Fed interest cut this year has reemerged and it is currently 65%. Elsewhere, Spain's left-wing coalition government (PSOE-Unidas Podemos) won parliamentary support, backed by 167 of the 350 legislators (see).

Oil prices slightly declined after last week's gains. While current levels seems to be high according to fundamentals, the likelihood of disruptions to Middle East supply maintain the oil prices at this high levels. Nonetheless, oil prices current level are below than those reached in April 2019, when concerns about sanctions against Iran oil exports surged. Elsewhere, gold prices remain steady at high levels, suggesting caution prevails.

Safe-haven currencies were steady overall. Sterling depreciated as dollar gained, due to GBP investors await for the meeting between Prime Minister Boris Johnson and the new European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen this Wednesday. Moreover, the UK government is also pushing to get the Brexit bill through the final Commons stages by the end of Thursday. On the other hand, in emerging markets, the Yuan led the gains amid encouraging trade news, while LatAm currencies generally depreciated.

Asian and European equity markets increased today, while the US is currently moving sideways but equity volatility remained contained (VIX hovering around 14).
