Virus contagion fears spook markets, amid absence of relevant drivers

Financial markets slid back as coronavirus contagion fears increased, ahead of the Chinese New Year (see). Equity fell sharply in Asia as China's CSI 300 index declined 3.1%, while Hong Kong's Hang Seng erased yesterday's gains and fell 1.52%, ahead of next week when China's markets will be closed the whole week for the holiday. There were other market drivers today, but none of them helped to improve the market mood. On the contrary, there was some friction between the U.S. and the EU on trade, while the data were mixed and the ECB meeting had a mute impact on the main variables.

The European Central Bank left its benchmark interest rates unchanged, as was widely expected. The statement notes a mild increase in underlying inflation and a slightly less negative balance of risks thanks to the U.S.-China trade agreement. As previously announced, the ECB launched its strategic review for 2020, which should be published before the end of the year. According with the ECB press release (see), the review will encompass quantitative formulation of price stability, monetary policy toolkit, economic and monetary analyses and communication practices. It will also address issues related to side effects of negative rates, the financial risk of climate change and communication (see).

On the U.S.-EU trade front, the noise continued, with the U.S. Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross reporting that the U.S. was still considering imposing retaliatory tariffs on EU car imports, although France agreed on Wednesday to delay payments of its digital company tax until the end of 2020.

Today's economic data was negative in the U.S. and in the Eurozone. December's U.S. leading economic index slightly declined above expectations (-0.3% MoM; Cons: -0.2% MoM; Prev: 0.1% MoM revised from 0.0% MoM) driven by the negative impact of the less-than-expected rise in unemployment claims. Elsewhere, in the Eurozone, the flash consumer confidence indicator fell more than expected in January (-8.1; Cons: -7.8; Prev: -8.1) and it has remained at the same low level since February 2017.

Sovereign bond yields plunged across the board, amid growing coronavirus concerns and ahead of tomorrow's PMI data release. Meanwhile, Italy's risk premia reversed yesterday's increase, and narrowed after Di Maio confirmed his resignation as leader of the 5SM party. Nonetheless, Italy's political risk remains high ahead of Sunday's regional elections.

In FX markets, the USD and the JPY were the top-performing currencies as market participants sought a haven. Meanwhile, the GBP erased yesterday's gains although it still remained close to a two-week high, while the Euro also depreciated against the dollar, underperforming its G10 pairs after Ms Lagarde's speech. Elsewhere, emerging currencies depreciated across the board.

Commodity futures prices fell sharply (oil prices -5%, copper -4%) as investors assess the impact of the coronavirus on the economy.
