

Market CommentChina takes measure to stabilize markets

- February has brought a cautious tone into the markets as coronavirus fears continue to weigh on global sentiment. After sharp declines experienced last Friday, all eyes were on today's Chinese markets opening, after it had been closed for a week due to the New Year holidays. As expected, the Chinese equity market showed a sharp decline, with most of the 80% of the stocks declining by the 10% daily limit. In addition to the catch up movement, the downturn in China's index came after Hong Kong announced it was closing 11 of its 13 land crossings with the Chinese mainland in order to reduce the spread of the virus (see), and imposing new restrictions on travelers coming from China to the U.S. and Russia.
- Chinese authorities took measures to stabilize markets: PBOC injected 1.2 trillion RMB ($173.8 bn) in liquidity into the banking system, cut the borrowing rate by 10 bps, and restricted broker activity. China's manufacturing activity went unnoticed for markets, although it moderated slightly less than expected (51.1; Cons: 51.0; Prev: 51.5). The slowdown in manufacturing was mainly driven by a weak increase in new orders that could not offset the drop in exports.
- Solid U.S. economic activity indicators confirmed stronger-than-expected figures in the ISM data: The manufacturing index rose in January above expectations (50.9; Cons: 48.5; Prev: 47.8, revised from 47.2) driven by a larger-than-expected increase in new orders (52.0; Cons: 47.7; Prev: 47.6 revised from 46.8), prices paid (53.3; Cons: 51.0; Prev: 51.7) and a slight growth in employment (46.6; Prev: 45.2 revised from 45.1). Elsewhere, construction spending inched down more than estimated in December (-0.2% MoM; Cons: 0.5% MoM; Prev: 0.7% MoM) as previous figures were revised up marginally from 0.6% MoM.
- Sovereign bonds yield inched up across the board, in line with the slight increase in equity markets after the U.S. 10Y yield hit levels close to August 2019 lows last Friday, when concerns about the U.S.-China trade war heightened. Meanwhile, positive manufacturing figures in the U.S. and Europe also help yield to recover some ground, although German yields remained well-demanded. Moreover, implied probability for a Fed interest cut this year remains around 80%.
- On FX markets, the dollar appreciated against its major pairs lead by the rebound on ISM data. G10 currencies depreciated with the GBP underperforming the rest, on the back of renewed EU-UK frictions. Prime Minister Boris Johnson and the EU chief Brexit negotiator, Michel Barnier, clashed over a post-Brexit trade deal as Britain refused to sign up to "highly ambitious" EU rules to prevent unfair competition (see). Elsewhere, emerging currencies were mixed, with the LatAm currencies generally appreciating, while the CNY depreciated sharply and traded above the psychological 7 threshold.
- Brent prices declined below $56 per barrel, as some estimations suggest that the Chinese crude oil demand could have declined by 20%. Concerns about oil demand may spur additional OPEC+ oil production (see). Furthermore, copper prices were also dragged by concerns about the coronavirus on global growth.
- European and U.S. equity markets recovered some ground today, helped by the Chinese stimulus and strong rebound in ISM manufacturing. Nonetheless, some market measures, such as implied volatility in equity markets, remain at relatively high levels (VIX around 18), suggesting a cautious tone remains in financial markets.
