Financial markets extended recovery amid upbeat economic data

- Risk-on mood continued to sail along on Wednesday, underpinned by positive economic data, the latest developments in fighting the coronavirus and upbeat corporate earnings. China said it would cut some fees and taxes to companies facing the coronavirus outbreak to curtail the negative impact, while some countries are developing potential treatments and vaccines to deal with the virus. Nevertheless, since the numbers of dead and infected people continue to grow (around 500 deaths and 25,000 confirmed cases), additional airlines have cancelled flights to Hong Kong amid a sharp fall in demand. Moreover, Moody's sources reported that the coronavirus will affect Hong Kong's sovereign credit profile through an impact on households and businesses.
- In terms of the ECB's speeches, the agenda became rather busy. Yesterday, Bank of Spain governor, Pablo Hernández de Cos, stated that the ECB should adopt a "simple" target inflation of 2% in order to provide "clarity". Today, the ECB's chief economist, Philip Lane, said that the current inflation rate is too low, suggesting that monetary policy should remain accommodative, but he added that fiscal policy will play a key role in stabilizing the economy. On the other hand, he sees a transitory impact on the economy due to the virus outbreak in China, while ECB President, Christine Lagarde, stated that it should be monitored, since they have an impact on the Eurozone's economic outlook. As a result of this uncertainty, she added that "the ECB's forward guidance on interest rates and asset purchases acts as an effective automatic stabilizer" (see).
- Upbeat data in the U.S. rippled through January. The non-manufacturing index also rose in January, surpassing expectations (55.5; Cons: 55.1; Prev: 54.9), suggesting a solid services sector. U.S. labor markets also showed a strong outlook, ADP employment unexpectedly accelerated in January (291k; Cons: 157k; Prev: 199k revised from 202k) but the trade deficit balance shrank in December (-$48.9b; Cons: -$48.2b; Prev: -$43.7b revised from -$43.1b). Final readings for Markit PMIs in both the Eurozone and the U.S. were revised upward, suggesting that their business activity started 2020 on solid footing. However, China's business activity growth slowed further. In the Eurozone, retail sales rose in December less than expected (1.3% YoY; Cons: 2.3% YoY; Prev: 2.3% YoY) since previous figures were slightly revised upward from 2.2%. On the negative side, Caixin China services PMI slowed to 51.8 in January from 52.5 (Cons: 52.0), while Composite PMI also decelerated (51.9; Prev: 52.6) as companies cut prices and new orders dipped.
- Sovereign yields extended yesterday's rally amid solid business activity data and the easing of coronavirus fears. Investors are now focusing on whether central banks will take actions to reduce their economy's damage. Against this backdrop, the odds of an additional Fed interest rate cut this year remains high (80%), while the yield curve slightly steepened.
- In FX markets, the USD continued its appreciation path, boosted by solid ISM services PMI. Meanwhile, commodity-linked currencies (SEK and AUD) appreciated timidly underpinned by the increase in Brent oil prices, while the other G10 pairs, including safe-haven currencies, depreciated amid dollar strengthening. On the other hand, emerging currencies were generally unchanged and the CNY remained below the 7 threshold.
- Equity markets rose amid economic optimism. Asian stocks extended yesterday's gains, while implied volatility in equity markets remained at low levels (VIX around 15).
