

Market CommentRelief rally after dramatic equity fall

- Equities whipsawed and recovered in early afternoon following a sharp drop, driven by increasing covid-19 cases. The virus's rapid spread through countries outside China -Brazil, Croatia, Austria, Greece and Switzerland reported their first cases of coronavirus infection- and growing cases around Europe and Middle East kept investors on edge.
- Nonetheless, the coronavirus situation seems to have improved in China: Chinese officials reported fewer coronavirus cases in the country on Wednesday than yesterday. Nevertheless, as the number of infections accelerated, Japan, which is expected to hold the 2020 Olympics, asked to delay the event, while Kuwait has suspended flights to Singapore and Japan, and the U.S. warned Americans to be prepared for coronavirus to spread within the country (see). Finally, further companies such as Danone and Diageo Plc claimed that the disease outbreak will weigh on their sales in China, moving value chain concerns into consumption imbalances.
- Central banks did not yet endorse further monetary easing in the short term. They acknowledged the downside risk due to the Covid-19, but said it is too soon to change the monetary policy stance. The ECB's President, Christine Lagarde, followed on the same page as the German finance minister, encouraging any fiscal measures intended to boost the economy (see). Fed Vice Chairman, Richard Clarida, warned that the covid-19 could have a significant impact on the Chinese economy and the rest of the world. However, Mr. Clarida also took the opportunity to send a clear signal to markets that the Fed is leaning against rate cuts in the short term.
- Today, there were few relevant economic reports. The new home sales index increased above expectations in January (764k; Cons: 718k; Prev: 708k revised from 694k) amid solid labor market data and lower borrowing costs.
- 10Y sovereign bond yields rebounded slightly from June-16 [A1] reached yesterday in the U.S., while in Europe, the German 10Y yield recovered above -0.5%. The latter was also boosted by comments from the Germany Finance Minister planning a suspension of the debt brake. However, 2Y yields extended the declines both in the U.S. and Germany, as markets increased expectations of further monetary policy easing in both the U.S. and Europe, although neither the Fed nor the ECB have endorsed further monetary policy easing in the short term. Markets have brought forward to April the probability of a 25bps interest cut (70%), while also penciling 100% probability of 50bps in November. On the other hand, the implied probability of a 10bps interest rate cut in the ECB deposit rate in December remained steady around 90%. Peripheral bond yields outperformed the core, with their risk premia widening, especially in Portugal and Spain. Nonetheless, despite the current strain in peripheral bonds, Spain managed to attract strong foreign demand in its 30Y syndicate bond issued yesterday.
- Caution among investors weighed on FX markets where most currencies depreciated. The DXY recovered from yesterday's drop and appreciated marginally, whereas the JPY remained under pressure. G10 currencies depreciated due to the strengthening of the dollar. Elsewhere, emerging currencies depreciated across the board as risk assets sold off.
- In commodities, Brent oil prices halted the latest drop due to uncertainty and fears regarding the deepening coronavirus crisis. On the other hand, gold prices fluctuate after record prices were reached last week.
- Equities were mixed, as European and U.S. stocks recovered some ground while they broadly fell in Asia. Implied volatility in equity markets retreated (25), although it remained hovering at yearly highs, suggesting investors' concerns remain elevated.
