In Mexico, consumer and producer confidence indices surprised slightly to the upside in August. Today eyes will be on monetary policy minutes in Brazil that should provide more information about future monetary policy decisions. We expect to see good activity levels in Chile, in line with another pause in the policy rate in September.

Chile - Monetary Policy Report

The last central bank Monetary Policy Report reiterated the need for moderate cuts in the monetary policy rate during the coming months. The bank forecast GDP growth between 4%-4.5% for 2013 (BBVAe: 4.2%), and a 4%-5% range for 2014 (BBVAe: 4.4%). Inflation is forecast to reach 2.6% in 2013 and 2.8% in 2014. In the central bank's baseline scenario, the MPR would be cut by no more than 50bp. Our view is that the MPR will probably reach a level below 4.25% during 2014, with the first cut made during the last months of 2013 (see our Chile Flash for details).

Mexico - Consumer and producer confidence indices surprised slightly to the upside in August

The consumer confidence index rose slightly in August to 96.1 points from 95.7 in July in seasonally-adjusted terms. Despite the slight improvement seen over the past two months, the trend does not yet reflect a clear recovery and this is consistent with the weakness of the labour market. Meanwhile, the producer confidence index also surprised slightly to the upside, rising from 51.3 points in July to 51.8 in August. The slight improvement is consistent with the recent upside surprises in US industrial production-related data.

What to watch today

Brazil - Monetary policy minutes (07:30hrs NYT)

The minutes of last week's monetary policy meeting should provide more details about the expected decision to hike the Selic rate by 50bp to 9.0% and, more importantly, about future monetary policy decisions. The focus is likely to be on the recent impact of currency depreciation on inflation and the possibility of keeping the pace of the adjustment at 50bp in October.

Chile - Monthly Activity Index (July, 08:30hrs NYT)

We expect the monthly economic activity index (Imacec) to have increased 6.1% YoY in July (+0.7% MoM sa). The print should mainly be driven by dynamic retail sales, mining output and manufacturing production, all of them supported by two additional working days. Overall, we think this figure should still favour the policy rate being maintained in September.

Colombia - Consumer inflation (August, 20:00hrs NYT)

We expect a 0.16% MoM increase in consumer prices (2.34% YoY), with core prices continuing their slow recovery. The monthly increase should be largely explained by the strikes in the agricultural sector translating into a temporary supply shock in food prices (which we expect to be around 0.35% MoM).
