September PMI figures: EZ recovery remains on track

- Strong service confidence led the improvement in September

The flash composite PMI increased again by 0.6 points to 52.1 in September, slightly above expectations (BBVA Research 51.7; Consensus: 51.8), continuing the upward trend that started by mid-year, but a slower pace than in previous months. The September gain was due to the improvement in the services component (52.1 from 50.7 in August), which is now clearly in expansionary territory, while the manufacturing index edged slightly down (51.1 from 51.4). Overall, manufacturing is likely to remain supported by still robust foreign demand (despite of slowing growth in emerging countries), but also by the relative dynamism of domestic demand, which is also reflected in the recent improvement of the service index.

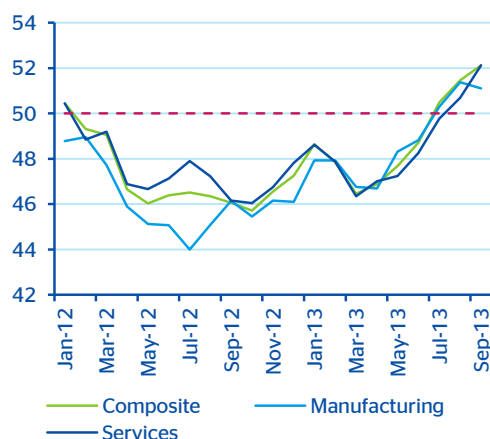

- The average PMI levels suggests a steady pace of the recovery, similar to that of 2Q13

Although we remain cautious in our assessment of the economy recovery and hard indicators have yet to prove the positive signs from soft data, our models (including these figures) suggest that the recovery in 3Q13 should be on track at a pace similar to that of 2Q13 (around 0.2% / 0.3% q/q).

- Across countries, better services confidence and resilient manufacturing sentiment was widespread

According to Markit's press release, business activity rose across the eurozone, led by Germany, that hit its 8-month high (53.8), and by France, that surprised sharply upwards after 18 months of contraction, rising from 48.8 in August to 50.2 in September thanks to the improvement of its service sector.
