Industrial production in Mexico declined more than expected in December. Meanwhile, in Peru, exports fell in December after three months of consecutive increases. Imports also fell, except for consumer and capital goods which is a sign of strong private domestic demand at the end of 2012. Today will be a relatively quiet day in Latam, with no major indicators expected to be published.

Mexico - December's industrial production fell more than expected. Moderation should continue in 1Q13e

Industrial production fell in December -2.1% MoM (vs. BBVAe 0.1% and consensus -0.1% in sa series). The sharpest decline was in construction at -2.7% MoM, followed by mining (-2.1%), manufacturing (-1.1%) and utilities (-0.5%). In annual terms, industrial activity fell 1.1% (original series), dragged down by construction (-5% YoY). The less dynamic manufacturing (-0.9% YoY) is explained by a slowdown in vehicle production towards the end of the year (December -4.7% MoM). We are still expecting GDP growth of 3.9% for YE12e and we are maintaining our call for economic moderation for the beginning of 2013e (see our Mexico Flash for details).

Peru - Exports fell 14.3% (YoY) in December

After recording three consecutive months of expansion, the value of exports fell in December, mainly as a reflection of a drop in primary product volumes. With this, exports closed 2012 down 1.4%. This monthly result is in line with our expectation of weak export growth in the first part of the year.

Peru - Imports fell in December due to lower fuel purchases

Imports fell 3.2% (YoY) in December but closed 2012 up 11.2% vs. 2011. The monthly figure mainly reflected lower demand for raw materials and intermediate goods, notably fuels. On the other hand, imports of consumer goods and capital goods expanded 13.1% (YoY) and 11.0% (YoY), respectively, which supports our view that private spending was expanding strongly at the end of 2012e.

What to watch today

Chile - Economist's Survey (January, 6:30 hrs, NYT)

Despite recent surprises in inflation and activity indicators, we expect the January economist's survey to reveal expectations of no change in the monetary policy rate for both this week's meeting and the medium term, in line with our estimates. The figures should also reveal expectations of continuing strong growth for the economic activity index (Imacec) in the current month, and inflation in the order of 0.2% MoM in February.
