September inflation in Peru surprised to the downside, and this together with less dynamic domestic demand, gives the central bank room to further relax its monetary policy rate. In Mexico, the IMEF manufacturing index pointed to continued weakness in the manufacturing sector. Today eyes will be on industrial production in Brazil and on monetary policy minutes in Chile.

Mexico - Manufacturing confidence remains low but an improved global outlook anticipates an improvement

The IMEF Manufacturing index increased slightly in August but remained below the 50 threshold for the fourth consecutive month. The index reached 49.3 points and there is still no sign of a clear change in trend, pointing to continuing weakness in the manufacturing sector. However, global manufacturing confidence improved in September, particularly in the US where the ISM index rose to 56.2 points from a revised previous reading of 55.7 points. Thus, we expect a more noticeable improvement in Mexico in September.

Peru - September inflation surprised to the downside

Consumer prices rose 0.1% MoM in September, below market expectations (BBVAe: 0.4%, consensus: 0.3%). This result reflected the stability of the average cost of food, while there were moderate increases in the prices of energy, textiles and healthcare. As a result, annual inflation fell to 2.8% (3.3% in September), lying temporarily within the target range (2% +/- 1pp). In a context of less dynamic domestic demand, in the short term this gives room for the central bank to further relax monetary policy (see our Peru Flash for details).

What to watch today

Chile - Monetary policy minutes (September, 7:30hrs NYT)

We expect the minutes to reveal the Board's concern about changes in global liquidity conditions related to the Fed's tapering. In our view, this was probably the main reason for the maintenance of the monetary policy rate at 5% during September. Domestically, activity is decelerating, but consumption of finished goods remains strong. In this context, we expect the minutes to reveal the Board's debate about policy options, between maintenance of the MPR and a preventative cut, in a scenario where headline inflation is still within the tolerance range. At the October meeting we expect another pause as a reflection of positive surprises in retail sales and rising inflation.

Brazil - Industrial production (August, 08:00hrs NYT)

Industrial output is expected to rebound slightly after declining 2.0% MoM in July. The figures released today will help analysts to shape their 3Q13 GDP forecasts. Our current assessment of recent indicators is that quarterly growth (QoQ%) will be close to zero in 3Q13e.
