Today we will be awaiting the results of the survey of analysts in Chile where we expect the prospect of a monetary pause at Thursday's meeting to be confirmed. We are also waiting for industrial production and retail sales data in Colombia, the first with moderate growth and the second confirming stronger private consumption

No relevant indicators were released yesterday

What to watch today

Chile - Central bank financial traders survey (1st fortnight in May, 08:30hrs NYT)

We expect the survey to reveal inflation estimates at around +0.2% MoM for May and expectations of a pause in the monetary policy rate at tomorrow's meeting. This is in a context where long-term inflation expectations remain anchored to the central bank's 3% target. Finally, we also anticipate an exchange-rate forecast in the order of USDCLP 565 on a three-month horizon.

Colombia - Industrial production and retail sales (March, 17:00hrs NYT)

In March, we expect strong YoY growth (7.3%) in industrial production due to a higher number of working days during the month. However, if data is adjusted for the working days, industrial production should grow only slightly, as anticipated by the fall in industrial exports in March. Meanwhile, retail sales should confirm the good performance of private consumption in the first quarter with an expansion of 6.8% YoY. Both these outcomes would be in line with our outlook.
